When the defense, special teams and offense all play well, good things happen. This was the case last Friday night as the Elks defeated Springboro on Homecoming 16-6.

The Black Shirt defense held the Panthers who were averaging 20 points a game to only 6 points. That touchdown came with only 29 seconds left in the game. Then the defense rose up and stopped their try for the two point conversion. Linebacker Landon King led the Elks with 10 tackles and 3 sacks. Linebacker Jackson Puckett also had 10 tackles and he sacked the quarterback 2 times. ! Three defensive backs got their names on the stat sheet for their ball-hawking efforts. Ross Coppock, Seth Alejandrino, and Reggie Powers each had one interception. Lual Siyr forced a fumble and multiple defenders also had pass breakups. Great job Black Shirts!

The Special teams, led by Coach Taylor and Coach Brown had a remarkable night as well. Kicker Leland Gantz was the leading scorer with three field goals and an extra point. He connected on two 48 yarders, and added a 35 yard field goal for a total of 10 points. He also averaged 37 yards on six punts including a 50 yard beauty that any NFL punter would have been proud of. Another strategic weapon of the special teams is pinning the offense back on their 20 yard line to start their drive. With Gantz's strong leg the Elks kick coverage team succeeded 3 out of 5 attempts. Great job guys!

The offense was primarily an air attack as quarterback Drake Wells completed 23 of 35 attempts with one touchdown to Bryce Cowgill . His favorite target was wide receiver Jamar Montgomery, who had 9 catches for 53 yards, and was the Offensive Player of the Week. With the victory the Elks remain in a three-way tie for first place in the GWOC with Fairmont and Wayne.

The Beavercreek Beavers visit Centerville Stadium this Friday night. This will be the 51st meeting between the schools dating back to 1973. The Elks have come out on top 48 times, including 16 shutouts, and averaging over 34 points per contest. The Beavers come into this battle with a record of 2-4, and feature two GWOC leaders. Linebacker C.J. Crawford leads with a league high 70 tackles, and Quentin Youngblood is the top rusher with 653 yards. We need Elk Nation to turn out and help the boys get their sixth win! GO ELKS!

Inside the Headset

Looking back at the Springboro game, what was the most positive takeaway?

Defense and Special Teams came up big for us. Hats off to those groups. They played very well and made it very hard on Springboro. It was done the right way too. Nothing was given to them. Springboro had a nice gameplan and our players and coaches rose to the challenge. Creating 4 turnovers and having a special teams unit that hits 3 deep field goals and also has two kickoff tackles inside the 20 yard line gives any team an advantage. The offensive unit is not happy with their performance, but some bright spots are that they were able to possess the ball, have zero turnovers, and score right before the half before getting the ball back.

Who stepped up and led the way against the Panthers?

We had a lot of guys that had a great game. It would be hard to name one or two. Our secondary did a great job with Alejandrino, Coppock, and Powers all grabbing interceptions to stop drives. The defensive line did a great job of holding down the line of scrimmage. Leland Gantz and the Field Goal unit did a great job of blocking and kicking three huge field goals.

What was a negative that the team needs to focus on?

We need to be better about scoring after turnovers. Taking the ball away from the other team is hard enough, but we can't put our defense back out there without scoring points. Additionally, we need to be better at getting first downs. Not just on 3rd down, but we need to be better about getting more first downs. As you get more first downs, you score more points. Ironically, you don't get more first downs without being better on first down. If we can be better on first down, we will be better at getting first downs, which will lead to more points.

This week you welcome Beavercreek. They have not won a GWOC game since 2017. How do you keep the intensity up at practice and make sure the team is not underestimating the Beavers?

How you do anything is how you do everything. If our intensity goes up and down with the opponent on the schedule, we are in trouble. I think our team understands that. Heck, I think our school, our district, and our community understand that. At Centerville, we pride ourselves in being competitive in everything we do. Not competitive in that we are trying to beat someone. Competitive in the nature that we are trying to be better than we were the day before. That's our focus. Always has been. Always will be.

Inside the Headset

Beavercreek's Head Coach, Marcus Colvin, has a proven track record of success both on and off the field as a coach and educator. What do you see as his biggest challenge to turn their football program around?

Coach Colvin is a tremendous coach, father, and role-model. To say I look up to him would be an extreme understatement. He's a great coach that relates to players well, relates to coaches well, and knows how to structure a program of constant improvement. He's the right man for the job over there. He's getting community buy-in and he's getting player buy-in. It's evident. You can see that the student body is excited about their games. It shows up on film. You can see that players are excited about playing for him. They have great numbers of guys coming out for the team. He's doing a great job and there's no reason to suspect that to change.

You and your staff are big supporters of multi-sport athletes. Burn-out and injury are concerns for an athlete who competes in the same sport year-round. How do you educate the football players about these concerns?

We believe that your actions speak louder than your words. I don't know that we sit down and have any lectures on the benefits of playing multiple sports. Maybe our assistant coaches do, but as a team we don't have tons of those conversations. The players know that we encourage them to play other sports. The players know that if they are thinking of stopping a certain sport, then we will be talking after the season about why that is and trying to show them that most likely they should be playing that other sport. The players know that we will accommodate our schedule for other sports. Our players know that our coaches will be at their other sports supporting them. We even encourage our players to work on skills for other sports while they are in football season as long as they aren't participating in any games or anything that could hurt our team. Like I said, our actions speak louder than our words and it is our hope that our players see that we value their athletic experience in other sports just as much as we value their experience in football.

'It's that way every week': Tight games the norm in GWOC

By Jeff Gilbert
Contributing Writer

Winning football games in the Greater Western Ohio Conference demands resiliency and sticking together. Teams across the league are playing that way. But they can't all win.

Winning and losing in the GWOC often comes down to a play or two late in the game. The latest examples of you win some, you lose some happened Thursday and Friday.

On Thursday, Miamisburg (4-2, 1-2 GWOC) scored with 11 seconds left to beat Northmont (3-3, 0-3) 36-33 and hand the Thunderbolts their third straight league loss in crushing fashion. T-Bolts coach Tony Broering has been on both sides of it. When his team went 8-0 in 2020, six games were decided on the last play or in overtime.

"I told them that story just two days ago in practice," he said. "It's no different this year except we're coming up on the short end of it. We have a good team, we have some very talented players, but we just don't make those plays at the end. And it's going to be the same thing next week against Wayne. It's that way every week."

Springfield (2-4, 1-2) played for the Division I state title last year, losing both times, and knows how hard it is to keep your record clean in the GWOC. In 2021, the Wildcats were upset 22-21 at Miamisburg. Last year Fairmont got them 24-21 at home. On Friday, the Wildcats tried to rally in the second half with Ohio State-bound cornerback Aaron Scott trying to make big plays at quarterback. He scored once but threw two interceptions in the fourth quarter and lost

10-7 at Fairmont.

The Wildcats are waiting on the return of junior quarterback Brent Upshaw who led them to a season-opening win over Cleveland St. Ignatius. He injured a knee the next week in a loss to DeMatha Catholic, a national power from Maryland. Upshaw played some two weeks ago in a last-seconds loss to Wayne but tweaked the knee. Wildcats coach Maurice Douglass said Upshaw is likely to return in two weeks.

"We just got to work," Douglass said. "Get back at it on Monday and see what we can get done."

That Wayne and Centerville are tied for first at 3-0 is not a surprise. But after the way Trotwood-Madison handled Fairmont 38-8 in Week 2, coupled with a 14-7 loss to Cincinnati La Salle, the Firebirds are the surprise team at 3-0. Two weeks ago, they rallied from a 14-0 deficit to beat Northmont in overtime.

"It doesn't matter," said Fairmont senior defensive back Stevie Doty. "Those losses in the past. We're on to GWOC."

Dave Miller has elevated the Fairmont program into a yearly contender since he became head coach six years ago. Doty has been there for most of it.

"Brotherhood," he said. "Coach Miller, he's built it into us. In my opinion, one of the best coaches you'd want. It's a senior-led team. If we see underclassmen messing around, we're going to make it stop before the coaches have to. Even the new guys from other schools, I can't think of a single person that's not bought in."

Next week it's Fairmont at Miamisburg, Springfield at Springboro and Northmont at Wayne. Expect more of the same.

2023 HS Football Preview: Building blocks taking shape at Beavercreek

By Steven Wright - August 15, 2023

BEAVERCREEK — Two wins may not seem like a big deal, but it is when there weren't many coming beforehand. Beavercreek football a year ago was able to break a losing streak which spanned three seasons. In doing so, the team proved to itself wins can come from the simple belief they can be achieved at all. That's the lesson head coach Marcus Colvin said he hoped was instilled in his players and hopes is carried over into this year's campaign.

"It's cliché, but it just is that way. We don't win if we don't believe we can," he said.

Colvin in year two at the helm sees his team going through what he described as the "cycle of belief" to improve its standing. He said it starts with not taking shortcuts in the way the team prepares each week, and ends with how those results are seen on tape. Take for instance last year's game against Springfield, the state runner-up in Division I the past two seasons. Beavercreek in the prior meeting during the 2021 season finished with -9 total yards of offense in a blowout loss. Less than five minutes into the 2022 matchup, the Beavers actually led on the scoreboard after an early touchdown drive.

"Versus Springfield we had 17 points and rushed for some yards," Colvin said. "There's positives in that regard. You just got to believe."

Beavercreek on offense in 2023 will have one of the league's top returning rushers, Quentin Youngblood, and on defense CJ Crawford's 116 tackles last season is the second most of returning GWOC players. There's plenty of room for players to step up into new roles, including at quarterback where Jack Minnick appears to be the signal caller. Colvin also noted getting strong line play from Reid Frick and Kane Corle would be big, and having players step up such as Maddox Johnson and Eliah Damigo fill spots in the secondary should shore up the defense.

It's always tough to win in the GWOC and Beavercreek is searching for its first since 2017. Road games at Springfield and Centerville mean the Beavers get neither of the league favorites at home. Two more road games to open the season, including the season opener at Xenia, will also test Beavercreek right out of the gate.

Colvin said one of the big challenges he encountered as a coach last season was attempting to get the focus of his players to where it realistically should be when the odds seemed to be stacked against them heading into a game. While he joked he keeps his personal worries geared toward snap exchanges between the center and quarterback before every game, he wants to help eliminate as many others from his players so they keep their attention on the positive actions they achieve.

"You play Wayne, Centerville and the such and we're not the favorite," Colvin said. "And that's fine. I want us to believe that we can achieve things in the midst of a football game. You may not win them all but you can watch film and say we need to get better there and look at what we did."

The hope is that belief leads to the next breakthrough win.

LIKE FATHER... LIKE SON

Lual Siyr forced the Springboro QB to fumble the ball, which was then recovered by Jacob Taylor. The officials signaling the turnover are Zachary Yikes (in the white cap) and his father Ed Yikes.

College Coaches Love to Recruit Multi-Sport High School Athletes

By NCSA College Recruiting

One of the most perplexing parts of recruiting for many families has been the shift in recent years for high school athletes to focus on one sport for a variety of reasons, one of them being to help get a college athletics scholarship. Michigan State head basketball coach loves recruiting players who play multiple sports in high school. His favorite player ever, Mateen Cleaves, led MSU to the 2000 National Championship. Besides being a blue chip basketball player, Cleaves was All-state and Dream Team selection in football as a quarterback at Flint (MI) Northern High School.

Jay Bilas, in his book 'Toughness,' named Cleaves the toughest college basketball player over the past 20 years. His toughness and remarkable leadership ability came in part from having been a leader and key player in two sports. When he got to Michigan State, he was better equipped to lead and compete fiercely than the player who had focused on basketball all the time.

The Notre Dame women's basketball team is ranked #2 and undefeated thanks in part to remarkable sophomore Jewel Loyd of the Chicago area. Notre Dame head coach Muffet McGraw says there is no doubt Loyd is the greatest athlete they have ever had player for the Irish. This week in a story in the Toledo Blade, Loyd attributes her foot work in basketball to fast reflexes needed in the doubles game. She also says her hand eye coordination was helped greatly by playing tennis.

In his book Through My Eyes, former University of Florida quarterback Tim Tebow says when then-Florida coach Urban Meyer came to recruit him, it was spring and Tebow was playing baseball. Meyer later said he had never seen a player impact a game from right field so much, and it was because of Tebow's leadership from out there.

In my opinion, having covered college sports for 25 years as a sports anchor, I found that the most competitive college athletes were those that had played at least two sports in high school.

Recently, US Lacrosse came out with an article where the vast majority of college coaches said they preferred signing recruits who had played several sports in high school.

Chris Bates, head coach at Princeton, says his own son Nick plays lacrosse, soccer and basketball.

College Coaches Love to Recruit Multi-Sport High School Athletes

By NCSA College Recruiting

“He plays these sports because he loves to do so,” said Bates. “But even now, some of his coaches want him to play across several seasons. We have to draw some limits, and explain that in the spring, he’ll be playing lacrosse and not soccer, which he plays in the fall. The boundaries have to be clear. I’d frown on having my son play just one sport. There are lots of transitive properties — things like spacing, vision and defensive footwork — that he brings from one sport to the other.”

Bates talked about why he would rather recruit players who have been playing multiple sports growing up: “These guys have a high level of athleticism but probably haven’t peaked yet as lacrosse players. Once they get to college, they will specialize and will develop and blossom. They usually have a steep growth curve, whereas some of the kids who have been single-sport athletes tend to burn out quicker. Oftentimes, they don’t have as much left in the tank.”

Scott Marr, head coach of University of Albany lacrosse, says this:

“Don’t succumb to the pressure that your kid ‘has to do this’ to get to the next level. The myth is that if you miss this tournament or that camp that you won’t make it. That’s not true. I don’t feel like you get the best out of kids when they are playing a sport nine months out of the year. Nothing feels really special anymore, because they are playing all the time and feel like they have to be at every tournament.”

Purdue University basketball hasn’t been the same since Chris Kramer graduated just a few years ago. Known for his fierce competitive fire, Chris was an All Big Ten player and Captain for three straight seasons as the Boilermakers were regulars in the Big Dance. Many families might think, “Well, to get my kid to D1 Basketball in the Big Ten, we have to do basketball year round – nothing else!” Chris Kramer and his family didn’t think that way. When Chris played at Huntington North (IN) High School, he played football, basketball and baseball. He earned eleven varsity letters over four years and set fifteen different school records in three sports.

By NCSA College Recruiting

Indiana University third baseman Dustin DeMuth led the Big Ten in batting average last year with a .377 average. When he was at LaPorte High School he was all conference in football, basketball and baseball in one of the toughest conferences in his state, the Duneland Conference.

LaPorte baseball coach Scott Upp, who leads a baseball program that has been ranked as high as number one in America, had this to say about the growing trend of 'specialization.'

"If there are coaches out there that are telling kids to play one sport, I think they're crazy," Upp said. "Because while you're working on drills and everything else like that, he's out competing against Crown Points and Merrillvilles and things like that, running from 6'2", 280-pound linemen. He's trying to get away and make plays. So he's competing, and you can't really substitute that. And basketball, with time winding down, he's got the ball in his hands, he's learning how to compete. And all those things that happen in other sports just make him that much better in baseball."

DeMuth is destined for the Major Leagues, where his competitive background will help an organization a great deal.

I know parents and recruits face a lot of pressures out there, from that high school coach who has subtly made it clear that to make varsity on their sport they had better commit a lot of the year to it, to the belief that you have to play travel ball non stop for exposure. It is a different time than when I was playing high school sports in the late 70's. The bottom line is that college coaches win with competitors who make plays and have a burning fire within. More times than not, those are the ones that played multiple sports before college.

Multi-sport athlete, Soso Anosike makes a tackle against Springboro and competes in the Elks Relays last spring.

The Dangers of Sports Specialization in Student-athletes

September 5, 2023 • Read time: 3 mins

Playing a beloved sport, especially on a team, can define a person's adolescent and teenage years. The rigors of physical activity, dynamics of teamwork, and journey of winning and losing shape a student-athlete. "As an athletic trainer, I love to see kids play sports," says Katie LaRue-Martin, athletic trainer (AT). "It's so great for them developmentally. But many kids today see their favorite athletes on TV and social media and assume they perform at that level year-round. So they try to do the same-and it creates problems."

With the prevalence of club teams, along with school-sports schedules, student-athletes have the opportunity to compete in the same sport year-round. It's called sports specialization, and it can begin as early as grade school. The trouble with playing one sport year-round, as Katie attests to, is that "students get burned out and injured if they don't take proper precautions."

The usual suspects

What Katie has seen as an AT has been witnessed for years throughout the United States. Groups such as the American Academy of Pediatrics have published findings about how "sports specialization has led to an increase in overuse injuries, overtraining, and burnout." Other studies have shown that specializing in a sport puts students-athletes at a "50 percent greater risk" of injury.

Sports Specialization Concern

“Student-athletes’ bodies are still developing,” says Katie. “Doing the same motions year-round puts wear and tear on muscles and bones that aren’t prepared for that.” While every sport has its own risks, the sports where specialization - and overuse injuries - are most common are:

- Running sports, like cross country and track
- Soccer
- Volleyball
- Tennis

Student-athletes specializing in one sport don’t get the time they need to rest between seasons. The result is overuse injuries that can escalate into severe injuries, “such as a stress fracture that becomes a full-blown fracture or a tendinopathy that becomes a complete tear,” says Katie. And that means more additional healthcare costs for treatment—and more time away from competition during recovery.

The most common overuse injuries Katie sees from sports specialization are

- Tendinopathy (tiny tears in a tendon from repeated strain)
- Stress fractures
- Knee and joint pain

Katie also points to less obvious but just-as-severe issues like burnout. “There’s an important psychological component to sports,” she says, “and the constant pressure to compete or the disappointment of injury can be a lot on a student.”

Variety is the spice of sports

The solution, Katie encourages, isn’t an off-season on the couch. Instead, she recommends letting younger athletes “sample sports,” trying different ones as seasons cycle, along with cross-training, and, yes, a little rest. She also points to recommendations, endorsed by many athletic groups, including

- Delaying sports specialization as long as possible
- Participating on one team at one time
- Practicing or training the same number of hours per week as a student’s age (i.e., ten hours a week for a ten-year old athlete)
- Playing a single sport fewer than eight months per year
- Resting for two days a week
- Resting from organized sports

Katie emphasizes that resting “could include playing pick-up games during off-seasons.”

Responding to an injury

The allure of specializing in a sport is the competitive edge. But nothing can dull that edge like overuse injuries, which can largely be avoided. If you or a student-athlete suspects an injury, don’t overlook it. Take them to their athletic trainer. How you relate to their advice can make all the difference.

As Katie points out, “If the AT recommends backing off or cross-training, that advice won’t ruin your kid’s career. It’ll enhance it. Have a positive reaction to help your student-athlete have a positive reaction. Remember that we’re going to help them stay active and in-shape.”
